STANFORD LOSES APPEAL

2 A U.S. appeals court rejected Texas financier Robert Allen Stanford's bid to overturn his conviction and 110-year prison sentence for running what federal prosecutors called a $7.2 billion Ponzi scheme. The 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans turned aside 10 arguments raised by Stanford. These included that he was not competent to stand trial, the government did not prove its case, the sentence was too long, and the trial judge was biased toward prosecutors, including by denying him a lawyer of his choice. REUTERS

PEANUT BUTTER RECALL

3 Hormel Foods Corp. said Thursday it was voluntarily recalling a limited number of jars of its Skippy peanut butter in seven states because they might contain small pieces of metal shavings. PHONE SPY PROGRAM

5 A U.S. appeals court refused to immediately halt the government's bulk collection of millions of Americans' phone records during a "transition" period to a new federal plan that bans the controversial antiterrorism surveillance. Heroin kingpin gets 13 years

A Boston man has been sentenced to spend 13 years behind bars after leading a multistate heroin trafficking organization.

Ygoa Almonte-Baez, 48, who lived both in Dorchester and the Bronx, was also sentenced to spend five years of supervised release and ordered to forfeit $2 million, U.S. Attorney Carmen Ortiz announced on Thursday.

The penalty comes after a July 2013 raid at Almonte-Baez's "stash house" in Lawrence, where authorities found 21 kilograms of heroin that was so pure they believed it would like have been diluted to a pile three times as large and supplied 120,000 doses of the drug, a release said. Police said he ran his operation in both Massachusetts in New York.

Police also found digital scales, grinders and other tools used to package and distribute the drug. Officers also seized $372,000 from a man who claimed he worked as a courier for Almonte-Baez, according to a release.

The case was the first to be prosecuted under a new federal response to address New England's opioid crisis, a release said.

"A substantial increase in the purity of heroin in recent years, as well as a reduction in its price, has persuaded many individuals addicted to prescription medication to switch to heroin," according to the release from Ortiz's office. "Overdoses from heroin have climbed substantially as a result."

The Drug Enforcement Agency's Cross Borders Initiative investigated the Almonte-Baez case, the release said. SPENCER BUELL

Somerville man charged in North End stabbing

A man was stabbed in the neck outside a North End bar early Thursday morning, police said.

Police said two men who knew each other got into an argument about 1:15 a.m. outside The Point bar and the shouting match escalated into physical violence.

Cops charged Evan Cobb, 22, with assault and battery with a dangerous weapon.

The victim was taken to Mass. General Hospital with non-life-threatening injuries.

Walsh: Boston breaks 15-year housing completion record

Boston is building upon its success. Mayor Marty Walsh announced that the city has set a 15-year record for housing completions in 2015.

Walsh said that in 2015 the city saw 3,292 new housing units, representing $1.4 billion in value. Before this high-water mark, the record was 3,257 units, which was set in 2006.

While celebrating the groundbreaking of a new 380-bed student housing facility at Emerson College, the mayor announced that nearly 1,200 dorm beds have been permitted to date as well.

"In order to strengthen our city and our workforce, we must meet the goals of our ambitious housing plan," Walsh said in a statement. "I appreciate the efforts of our development community and our colleges and universities in helping us meet these challenges and we will continue working to create and maintain housing that keeps up with our city's growth."

In 2015, there are 1,243 affordable housing units under construction, which Walsh said is 109 percent ahead of the pace to build 6,500 new units by 2030.

Gaming boss warns against 'heavy' fantasy sports regs

Crosby warns "heavy" regulation could "crush" the fantasy sports industry.

The Massachusetts Gaming Commission formed a rough consensus on Thursday that the pay-to-play daily fantasy sports industry should be regulated, but the commission's chairman urged caution, noting the industry is already taxed on its profits and winnings.

"Should there be more? I don't know. I do think we want to be mindful of the fact that if we came in heavy on this, we could crush an industry like this overnight," chairman Stephen Crosby said.

Crosby told reporters

The fantasy sports website FanDuel. GETTY IMAGES either a "very heavy and expensive regulatory environment" or taxation of gross revenues, as opposed to net revenues, could be damaging to the industry.

"If that's what you want to do, fine. But you don't want to do it by accident," Crosby told reporters.

Three of the five commissioners said they favored regulation, while Crosby and Commissioner James McHugh were undecided on whether additional regulations should be added specific to daily fantasy sports.

"If we came in heavy on this, we could crush an industry like this overnight."

Crosby

Appearing on Boston Public Radio on Thursday, Senate President Stanley Rosenberg said he favors an additional tax on top of that paid by winners and the business taxes paid by the sports sites.

"I would tend in that direction because they're going to be in competition with the casinos, where we're doing a higher tax," said Rosenberg.

Yes, seasonal affective disorder is real: Docs

Even though it's become "mainstream," experts tell Metro it's not some "pop culture diagnosis."

SPENCER BUELL
spencer.buell@metro.us

No one likes winter.

Sure, it can be fun to strap on a pair of skis or chuck some snowballs around, but everyone who has ever made the long, slushy trudge to work or waited in the sleet for a bus to come has cursed the infernal season.

So does feeling moody about the prospect of shoveling out a car or getting snow jammed in your boot mean you have seasonal affective disorder?

No, Boston experts told Metro. SAD, a coincidentally relevant acronym, is real. And you don't have it just because every winter you threaten to move to Florida.

"It's different from the 'winter blues,' where one morning you're like, 'This sucks,'" said Dr. Katia Roth, a licensed psychologist with Commonwealth Psychology Associates. "Which is why education about this is so important, and understanding that this is actually a subtype of depression and not just some wishy-washy, mainstream pop culture diagnosis."

Regionally, as many as one in 25 suffer from the clinical seasonal malaise, experts who spoke to Metro said.

Roth said she's had several patients see her for the disorder, the symptoms for which can start to creep up right around this time of year as the days get shorter. Clocks turn back one hour for daylight saving time on Sunday, Nov 1, chopping an hour of sunlight from the afternoon.

It's natural to feel sluggish or moody in the winter, Roth said. But when it starts interfering with normal functioning — a lack of energy, becoming less social, finding it hard to go to work, eating too much, a change in sleep patterns — it may be time to seek help, she said.

Roth said she treats SAD patients in the same way she treats others with depression: cognitive behavioral therapy, medication. And then there are the SAD lamps, the so-called "happy lights" that blast users with a little extra light in the morning to help realign a SAD-impacted internal clock.

For more than 20 years, light therapy has been the go-to for researchers and clinicians as a way to supplement or avoid using medication as a treatment altogether, said Dr. Janis Anderson, a SAD expert with Brigham and Women's Hospital's psychiatry department.

"We've been tinkering with that for some time," she said.

As SAD becomes more and more well-known, and more likely to show up in dreary winter Facebook posts or "happy light" selfies on Instagram, it's also made people more open to talking about their mental health or seeking help, Anderson said.

"In some ways SAD is a more socially acceptable kind of depression," she said.

Attaining pop culture status doesn't mean everyone knows what they're talking about though, she said. And that includes doctors. Anderson said she's heard of physicians telling patients who think they might have SAD to just "sit in front of a light."

And many people try to treat SAD symptoms on their own, sometimes buying phony products that don't meet medical standards, or buying the right ones and using them incorrectly, Anderson said. Some online resources are helpful (she recommends the Center for Environmental Therapeutics at CET.org), but after decades of research in Boston and beyond, she said, there still aren't enough informed patient-to-doctor conversations about the disorder, and that has to change.

"What we really need are more providers who can answer those questions," Anderson said.

South Carolina church massacre detailed in newly released documents

The accounts cited calls from a person inside Emanuel African Methodist Episcopal Church, and another who hid in an office in the church.

Police logs released on Thursday revealed a chilling account of the June 17 massacre at a historic black church in Charleston, South Carolina, that killed nine people.

"People shot down. ... Shot pastor. ... Man is still here. ... Lower level ...," an entry in the police communications log said.

An entry one minute later said, "Young white male. ... Male is reloading."

"Shots have been

"People shot down. ... Shot pastor. ... Man is still here."

Police communications log fired. The number of shots fired is: SO MANY."

According to the report, authorities were aware of a woman hiding under an office desk with her daughter in the church. They also knew the suspected shooter had fled out the church's back door.

Dylann Roof, 21, has been charged with murder and state prosecutors are seeking the death penalty. He also faces nearly three dozen federal hate crime and weapons charges in what authorities say was a racially motivated rampage.

The heavily redacted police reports and photographs released by the Charleston Police Department on Thursday make up some of the evidence against Roof.

Some media organizations who sued to get the documents made public said police went too far in blacking out names, comments and key details.

A state judge this month lifted a gag order placed on the evidence but decided that graphic crime scene photographs, audio of 911 emergency phone calls and other sensitive materials would remain sealed to protect the victims.

State prosecutor Scarlett Wilson said in a letter to media that further investigative reports would be withheld if her office decided they infringed on the privacy of the survivors and families of victims or could harm Roof's right to a fair trial.

The released documents said Roof was quiet and compliant when officers located him in Shelby, North Carolina, the morning after the massacre and pulled over his car about 10:30 a.m. When asked if he knew why he was detained, he nodded his head.

A sergeant asked Roof if police should know about anything in his car.

"Yeah, there's a gun in the backseat," Roof said, according to the report. REUTERS

Bradley Cooper gets down to business in "Burnt." THE WEINSTEIN COMPANY

Into the fire

THE FUN STARTS HERE

Bradley Cooper heads back into the kitchen as a volatile chef seeking redemption in "Burnt."

NED EHRBAR
@Nedrick
ned.ehrbar@metro.us

"Burnt" isn't the first time Bradley Cooper has played a chef. He started on the short-lived Fox sitcom "Kitchen Confidential" — inspired by Anthony Bourdain's exploits — some 10 years ago. This time, though, he's taking on an even more volatile cook, with a reformed hard-partier inspired by Gordon Ramsay, Marcus Wareing and Marco Pierre White going for his third Michelin star.

I was actually a huge fan of "Kitchen Confidential." In your mind, is there any sort of connection between the two? You know, it's so different. The characters and the tone are so different. That was a half-hour single-camera comedy for Fox, and this is a feature film. I never did feel a connection — I thought I would feel more, but I didn't. When I got into the kitchen with this movie, it just felt like a completely different thing. It was just so real.

How realistic of a kitchen setup are we talking?

That's a functioning kitchen. There were no cooking doubles. Every shot, that's me doing it, for better or for worse. All the other extras that you see in the kitchen, those were all chefs who work in Michelin-starred restaurants. None of them were actors aside from my co-stars. The rest were all chefs. And we were making food. Each day, we would come into work, there would be orders that we would have that I would call out, and there would be food in the refrigerator ready to cook those meals, and we had to cook them. And they just rolled the camera. Then we had Marcus Wareing, who is a two-Michelin-starred chef who created all the dishes, overseeing everything for its authenticity behind the monitor. So yeah, it really was unique in that way.

Doing multiple takes of eating scenes can be rough, but what do you do when you're cooking things over and over again?

There's a whole other kitchen behind our kitchen that was making all of the extra plates of food to be brought out. The minute it would be over, they would replenish everybody's pan with the food, the steak, the fish so that I could plate it again.

So how do you think you'd fare as a chef?

The one thing I was aware of after doing this movie was how unequipped I am to be a chef. I thought I was much better than I was in terms of having worked in restaurants, having been a prep cook, having been a part of a brigade. When I was 18, I worked at a seafood and Italian restaurant in Somers Point, New Jersey, and cleaned 625 chickens in one day. It was insane, the stuff I had to do and be berated by chefs like

So long, Broadway

You also wrapped up your theatrical run of "The Elephant Man" in London's West End and on Broadway. Any plans for more stage work in your future? Oh man, I don't know. That that. But that pales in comparison to this level of perfection, this level of accuracy, this level of pursuit for perfection. And it's real. Doing research with Gordon Ramsay — who opened up his whole world to me, really — him and Marcus, those were the guys who really showed me how it's done.

Where do you think this reputation of chefs being so volatile comes from?

I think the rock star idea, the iconic chef, really originated with Marco Pierre White. There was a cookbook that came out called "White Heat" where the photographer had taken these badass photos of him, and then "Boiling Point" was a documentary the BBC was a year. A whole year of my life. [Laughs] That was two different countries for a year. I think I need a little break. Maybe just movies for a little while.

did about Gordon Ramsay going after his third Michelin star, and it was the first time anyone had ever agreed to let cameras go behind the scenes in the kitchen of that level of a restaurant. And that's where it all sort of started. You realized how intense and high-octane that world is.

"Burnt"

Director: John Wells
Stars: Bradley Cooper, Sienna Miller
Rating: R

"Burnt" is simple, obvious, even lazy ... but it has food. The camera pushes in close on fish frying in pans, on seasoning being daintily sprinkled over choice cuts, on the clatter-clatter-clatter of wooden spoons banging around inside a pot over dancing flames. If you're a gourmand — which is to say you like staring at edibles you can't eat on screens as much as you like actually consuming them — then the food-porn genre is one whose wares always get at least a pass.

Good thing, too, because "Burnt" is familiar in more ways than one. Bradley Cooper plays Adam Jones, once a superstar chef destroyed by ego and drugs, now seeking one of those nice movie redemptions. He's a lot like Anthony Bourdain. In fact he's so like Bourdain the actor has already been him (or, rather, "Jack Bourdain"), on the short-lived TV show "Kitchen Confidential." Adam isn't Bourdain-fun, though. As he rebuilds in London, installing himself in a new kitchen and seeking that always elusive third Michelin star, he all-caps shouts and throws pans and sweats spinal fluid when handsome dishes aren't next-level. He upbraids no-nonsense sous-chef Helene (Sienna Miller) by saying, "You lack arrogance" and betrays his towering artistry by saying things like "Consistency is death."

It's not even worth pointing out that "Burnt" is consistently predictable — basically comfort food, only with a soupçon of grit. Director John Wells ("August: Osage County") shoots in hand-held, and talented writer Steven Knight ("Eastern Promises," "Locke") doesn't ease up on the antisocial tirades. But Adam is mostly charming-unpleasant, and he's guaranteed a happy ending. "Burnt" seems to think it's a radical new twist on risotto. In truth it's closer to a lightly spiced-up mac-and-cheese. MP

"Steve Jobs" has been hyped for only covering three events in the Apple icon's career. "Experimenter" tackles just about everything done by the (in)famous social psychologist Stanley Milgram, but it's even more experimental, even more playful and even more lousy with ideas. Played by Peter Sarsgaard with a coldness that oozes both venality and charisma, Milgram first made a splash with a test in which he asked average people to take part in a learning experiment that was secretly a test of their obedience to follow orders, no matter how inhumane. Later experiments would expand on this theme, making him both a name and a pinata for those who found his methods, which involved lying to his human guinea pigs, unethical.

Director Michael Almereyda doesn't judge. In fact, he designs the film as though Milgram were making it himself. The world of the film is artificial, complete with obvious rear-projection as characters drive. But Milgram remains a tantalizing enigma. (Sarsgaard hasn't been this razor sharp since "Shattered Glass.") It may seem as cold as Milgram, but it delights in surprising the viewer, right up to its odd, mysterious and perfectly judged final moment. MP

'Crisis' is a political film more goofy than heavy-handed

"Our Brand Is Crisis"

Director: David Gordon Green
Stars: Sandra Bullock, Billy Bob Thornton

MATT PRIGGE
@mattprigge
matt.prigge@metro.us

Disarmingly fun for a George Clooney-produced movie based on a sobering political documentary, "Our Brand Is Crisis" is a movie that allows you to catch a ride with monsters. Sandra Bullock plays "Calamity" Jane Bodine, an infamous campaign consultant lured out of calm, boring, nicotine-free retirement to help an incumbent Bolivian president (Joaquim de Almeida) suffering a disastrous re-election. She and her team don't bother seeing if he's a good man. (He isn't.) And they think nothing of foisting American-style electioneering upon another nation.

Things are bound to get serious, but the middle hour-and-change belong to director David Gordon Green, the cha-meleon of the Malickian "George Washington" but also multiple weed comedies, like "Pineapple Express." Green is mostly having a blast, not just reveling in bad behavior but going along for the ride. Our antiheroes squee with every poll point bump, and are soon reduced to rampaging teenagers, drunkenly vandalizing their opponents' swanky hotel digs and even mooning them after a big score. Bullock brings the same spunky, clownish verve she's long brought to fizzy rom-coms to a film in which our heroes spin Machiavellian lies to an entire country.

The good times have to end, and by good times we mean Americans obviously wreaking untold havoc upon another country. Thanks to Bullock's infectious glee, we're made to laugh when they cheer, cheer when they cheer and generally get caught up in the mayhem. We might even forget that what they're doing is terrible, and only too late realize that what we've been enjoying is the ensuring of a tyrant's reign.

The last act puts too fine a point on this. Imagine if Michael Ritchie's "The Candidate," an obvious inspiration, went on long after its iconic punchline, trailing Robert Redford's vacuous pol as learns the true meaning of honoring the people. It still can't ruin what has been a goofy lark, which is better than another heavy-handed message-monger anyway.

LeBlanc is unusual for you because she's mostly

In "Our Brand Is Crisis," Zoe Kazan plays LeBlanc, a political researcher who is excellent at both digging up dirt and translating Spanish. WARNER BROS. PICTURES

a comedic character. That was part of it — the idea of getting to play this enigma. I had also accidentally done a lot of romantic comedies. I was just tired of that genre. I liked the idea of being able to do something about a bunch of people using their minds, and there was getting to speak Spanish in a movie. It's a language I grew up speaking, which I never get to use.

How did you wind up growing up speaking

Spanish?

My mom was a Navy brat, and their family was stationed in Barcelona for a portion of her childhood. My mom spoke Spanish. And then my parents are both writers and worked full-time seven days a week. So they hired this woman to come and not nanny me, but raise me. I became incredibly close to her. And she doesn't speak any English. So I grew up speaking Spanish with her.

Given your character primarily serves as a translator, I assume your grasp of the language is what got you the role. I auditioned for the part. I had to improvise in Spanish in the audition. I think everyone thought I was much better at Spanish than I actually am. My accent is good; it fools people.

This is technically a political film, but it's more along the lines of "Veep" or "In the Loop," where it's not a specific party that's being criticized but the game itself.

I don't think there are overt politics to the film, and I think that notion is partly what the movie is about. These people are people who are working in the political field who are not doing it because they're passionate about this or that cause. It's because they're passionate about winning. In that way, it could be any industry in which there are winners and losers.

Zoe (doesn't) go to the movies

It's rare these days to have a studio film like this that is about ideas. There are enough films that are interesting and worth our time that don't get a sufficient run in the theater, or they do get out there and we just don't manage to make it to see them. ... I can't remember the last time I went to the theater. I mean, I haven't seen "Sicario" yet. It's exactly the kind of movie I say I want to see: a movie that's about something, that has a strong female role. And then it's like, "Oh, it's in theaters right now." That's shame on me.

Aries You will meet someone who can turn your life around. Sign up for social events to maximize your chances to meet a compatible partner.

Taurus Don't get caught slacking on the job. Your reputation will suffer if you don't put your best effort forward today. Stay away from negative colleagues.

Gemini Your outgoing nature will encourage mixing business with pleasure. Hosting a gathering can be successful if you don't overspend or overindulge.

Cancer You have personal flair and a vivid imagination. A new acquaintance will provide the key to an interesting moneymaking venture.

Leo Don't expect family members to agree with your plans. Get involved in an activity and keep your relatives at arm's length in order to avoid squabbles.

Virgo Personal problems are best dealt with swiftly. Rid yourself of the people or situations that are causing you pain. Don't postpone the inevitable.

Libra A poor financial decision is likely if you act in haste. Refer to professionals regarding investments, inheritances or savings plans.

Scorpio Gambling and lending must be avoided. Financial gains look positive, but independent ventures will be much more rewarding than joint investments.

Sagittarius Volunteering for your community or another worthy cause will be fulfilling and lead to strong connections with like-minded people.

Capricorn Don't let stressful situations get to you or your health will suffer. Your creative abilities and strong intuition will allow you to succeed.

Aquarius Your charm and charisma are strong. You will be able to convert others to your way of thinking. Enjoy basking in the limelight.

Pisces Resist the urge to tell others how to solve their personal problems. Be sympathetic, but withdraw if you are asked to take sides. EUGENIA LAST

Getting in the end zone key in daily fantasy

Whether you have dreams of winning a million dollars or beating your friends in a tournament, the best way to get paid is finding those players with the best chance of finding pay dirt. The goal is to target a player who is frequently used in the red zone against a defense that has been burned by a particular position. Knowing these trends should help you pick out those players with the best chances of scoring.

Running backs

TODD GURLEY ($8,100)

At this point, how can you not start Gurley? He has eight red-zone rushing attempts this year, including three in Week 7, with two ending up as touchdowns. He has also had at least 19 carries for 128 yards in three straight games. He has a great chance of staying hot this week against a Niners defense that has allowed 113 rushing yards per game and seven rushing touchdowns to opposing RBs.

DOUG MARTIN ($7,500), JUSTIN FORSETT ($6,900), CHARCANDRICK WEST ($6,600), JONATHAN STEWART ($6,600)

Wide receivers

JULIO JONES ($9,200)

Julio has not broken 100 yards in four straight games, but he did score against the Titans, snapping his streak of three games without finding the end zone. His 12 red zone targets are by far the most on the Falcons, and he's seen double-digit targets in all but one game.

CALVIN JOHNSON ($8,600), KEENAN ALLEN ($8,000), STEFON DIGGS ($6,700), DORIAN GREEN-BECKHAM ($4,900)

Tight ends

TYLER EIFERT ($6,000)

Elfert's nine red zone targets are tied with A.J. Green for the team lead, although six of his have culminated in touchdowns. He has a great matchup this week against the Steelers, who have been burned by tight ends, allowing 44 receptions, 465 yards and six touchdowns.

TRAVIS KELCE ($5,900), BENJAMIN WATSON ($5,400), AUSTIN SEFERIAN-JENKINS ($5,200)

C'S ON WINNING PATH

Go ahead. You can say it. This Boston Celtics team is refreshing.

That doesn't mean you're admitting to anything outrageous. For example, you're not exactly predicting them to win an NBA championship this year. If you are, then you and me have a different understanding of what we'll be witnessing on that brand-new parquet floor at the Garden in 2015-16.

This Celtics season represents the type of "step in the right direction" philosophy that not many franchises can master. It's a team that's deep — almost too deep — with some very talented players. Right now, at least, none of that depth is filled with All-Star-caliber talent. But that's OK. The Celtics are comfortable with that, and so am I.

Now, it's understandable why some people weren't sold on an off-season that included the additions of David Lee, Amir Johnson, and four draft picks. There was nothing "blockbuster" about this past summer. And in the NBA world that we live in, if you don't have superstars, you aren't winning championships.

The Celtics are using this season to do both in the very near future: acquire superstars, and then

OPINION

"The Danny Picard Show" airs every weekday at DannyPicard.com. Danny can also be heard on WEEI 93.7 FM. @dannypicard win championships. But the former must come first. Even the C's front office understands that.

Which is why they traded for Lee, signed Johnson, and re-signed Jae Crowder and Jonas Jerebko. Those four players don't equal an NBA title. Heck, they don't even equal an Eastern Conference championship right now. But they represent improvement. And "improvement" is a lot easier to accept when you don't have to use the word "tank" all season. Because the Celtics own the Brooklyn Nets' first-round picks for 2016 and 2018. And here's a little Nets preview: they're terrible. So all we have to do here in Boston is worry about winning. That's right. Not tanking. Winning.

In Vegas, the over-under on Celtics wins was 45.5 entering Wednesday night's season-opener — a 112-95 win over the 76ers. Last year, the C's won 40 games, finished as the seven seed in the East, and got swept by the eventual Eastern Conference champion Cavaliers in the first round. With the added depth, a full season of Isaiah Thomas and Crowder, and another year of experience for 2014 No. 6 overall pick Marcus Smart, these Celtics are set to win 48 games and obtain either a four or five seed in the playoffs. And it could even be better than that, if Celtics CEO and co-owner Wyc Grousbeck was telling the truth on "Felger and Mazz" Wednesday when he said, "Mostly we're looking right now at trades for December and February, and then we'll worry about free agency after that."

Of course, the elephant in the room during that conversation was Kevin Durant's impending free agency; the type of off-season signing or sign-and-trade that would be the dream result to Danny Ainge's ultimate plan. And while the Celtics have made and will continue to make the necessary improvements that grab the attention of some key free agents this summer, it may take the addition of an All-Star to convince someone like, let's say, Durant, to make Boston his new home.

Hearing Grousbeck discuss this year's trade deadline — and publicly acknowledge that the team has the salary-cap space for "two" max contracts next year — makes me believe that he and president of basketball operations Danny Ainge have something up their sleeves before the Feb. 18 trade deadline.

And if they can land a big-money All-Star in a blockbuster deal, like, let's say, a DeMarcus Cousins, then perhaps convincing an elite scorer to sign in Boston as a free agent won't be such a pipe dream after all.

Names like Cousins and Durant are just two examples. But we'll leave that up to Ainge and Grousbeck. Right now, the only thing the current Celtics need to worry about is winning.

And that mindset is pretty damn refreshing.

A look at the best bets for NFL Week 8:

Green Bay Packers (-3) at Denver Broncos

Both of these teams come into this game off their bye week undefeated at 6-0, but someone's "O" has got to go on Sunday night. The narrative for the Broncos this season has been that Peyton Manning is done and that his defense is doing all the heavy-lifting, and the stats don't belie that. Denver's defense has given up the fewest YPG in the league and has forced nine INTs and 11 fumbles, all near the league lead. But Green Bay has been almost as good on defense. The Packers bend but are hardly ever broken; Green Bay is 10th in YPG allowed but has surrendered an NFL-low 16.8 PPG. They've also forced 15 total turnovers this season, so Denver's strength is matched. The pick: Packers -3

Minnesota Vikings (-1) at Chicago Bears

The Bears come into this home game fresh off a bye week and a little healthier. Alshon Jeffery and Eddie Royal, two of Jay Cutler's most important targets, should be at full strength after playing at Detroit at less than 100 percent two weeks ago. The location of this game (Soldier Field) is important, as the home team has won the last six meetings between these two teams. The Bears compare favorably with the Vikings on both sides of the football; Minnesota ranks seventh in defense while Chicago ranks 10th, and the Bears outrank the Vikings on offense 27th to 30th in YPG despite playing without Cutler and Jeffery for parts of this season. The pick: Bears +1

Arizona Cardinals (-4.5) at Cleveland Browns

The Cardinals have the Browns overmatched on both sides of the ball. If Arizona's fourth-ranked defense doesn't shut down Cleveland's moribund offense that managed just six points against the Rams last week, Carson Palmer and his fourth-ranked offense will overpower Cleveland's miserable defense (ranked 28th in YPG allowed). The Cardinals could wind up covering the over (46) by themselves if their defense gets into the act; they've been among the best in the league at creating turnovers (12 INTs and 8 forced fumbles in seven games).

The pick: Cardinals -4.5

FANTASY SPORTS

ADAM LEVITAN
alevitan@metro.us

There's nothing like the early season waiver wire in the NBA.

Patience serves owners well in the long slog that is baseball. In football, there is no stone unturned prior to fantasy drafts. But in hoops, new systems, improved players and changes in role aren't nearly as known. Don't hesitate to react quickly if we see good stuff out of emerging youngsters like this:

Lean on Leonard

The Blazers completely cleaned house this offseason. They lost LaMarcus Aldridge, Nicolas Batum, Robin Lopez, Arron Affalo and Wes Matthews. Meanwhile, they added very little. It's going to be the Damian Lillard chuck and duck show, but big man Meyers Leonard is an underrated talent. He averaged 0.9 treys per game last year despite playing just 15.4 minutes a night and was at 6.7 rebounds per game in the preseason on just 24.7 minutes. Now Leonard is looking at something in the range of 28 to 31 minutes, giving him serious upside.

Stan the man

Rookies such as Karl-Anthony Towns, Jahlil Okafor and Emmanuel Mudiay are already on everyone's radar. But No. 8 overall pick Stanley Johnson of the Pistons has the sneaky upside. He's starting off in a bench

NFL pickups

Grab these guys off the wire for Week 8:

Chris Polk, RB, Texans — Alfred Blue may get the start with Arian Foster done, but Polk is more versatile and talented.

Ladarius Green, TE, Chargers — Antonio Gates is battling knee issues and a bond is growing between Green and Philip Rivers.

role behind Marcus Morris, the underwhelming twin of Markieff. Johnson has the ability to overtake that starting gig before too long, as shown by his impressive preseason. Morris' 18-10-4 opening-night line is a temporary hurdle.
